

to computerize the workings of the Clerk's Office. The defendant claims that the lady who ultimately filled the position was more capable in a computerized setting than the plaintiff. Plaintiff asserts that he received one day of training on the computer but was never afforded an opportunity to show that he was, indeed, capable of operating under the new format.

As this brief summary discloses, there are enough factual disputes to preclude the grant of summary judgment. Conceivably, a jury could reasonably find that plaintiff's age was a significant factor in the personnel decisions, notwithstanding the strong evidence to the contrary. The case is simply not amenable to summary disposition.
